Millionaire Topples From Summit Of World Financial Empire

New York, January 17—Bjorn Faulkner, Swedish tycoon who rose from the slums of Stockholm to build a financial empire girdling the world, plummeted to his death late last night from atop the twenty-story skyscraper he had constructed as a symbol of his invulnerability and success.

Faulkner, who had only recently celebrated his forty-fifth birthday by adding a forty-fifth corporation to his list of holdings, fell, or may have been pushed, according to police, from the luxurious penthouse gardens which adjoin the lavish apartment now occupied by Faulkner's one-time business associate and secretary, Karen Andre. Miss Andre, known to some of the Faulkner clients as the Norse Dragon, was with Faulkner at dinner at the Stork Club and appeared shortly after his death among the horrified watchers on the sidewalk at the foot of the Faulkner Tower. She is being held for questioning.

former Nancy Whitfield of Newport and Brookline, Mass., daughter of John Graham Whitfield, philanthropist, was contacted by reporters at her Long Island mansion, but refused to answer questions. Her father later released to the press a statement that she was "shocked and shaken" and had been put under the care of a family physician. Police have begun an intensive investigation of circumstances leading up to Faulkner's sudden and mysterious death.

in its study of a possible site, will be governed not only by the present population of the areas, but will also consider the future growth, in order that the center will be located at a site that will be the most convenient to all of the areas affected.
